

The Emptiness of Knowledge

Spiritual awareness is like a ladder of consciousness. People understand more as they climb higher, and less in the bottom.

Over the years it has become exceedingly difficult to unite the higher end of the ladder with the lower end of the ladder, even in this forum.

You don't understand? Well spend 5 years of consistent meditation, and grow your mind, and go outside in an attempt to "explain" things to the "common person".

This is identical to how one who is really working with let's say, the fire element, on a major level of adeptness, understands what the Fire element is for real. But the person who does not have any such level attained, sees all knowledge as empty: Nihilo Ex Nihilo.

The nihilistic state of consciousness is a stage where reception of information is very low. In this case the practitioner also believes that their problem is lack of further information, instead of the size of their own ears. This builds on the assumed fallacy that other individuals are the reason of one's inner state of ex nihilo.

This makes a lot of people demand more and more knowledge, sort of how a depressed person requires more and more stimulus for dopamine, but primarily their issue is their depression and not the lack of dopamine per se or the stimulus, but rather an internal lack of function over the situation.

It becomes also structurally impossible to explain specific matters because the ladder is rather long. Indeed, by the time one has explained something that may hold hundreds of karats of wisdom, it may not even be received, because there is no ear.

The level of knowledge absorption one has, is not reliable to solely external information, but also internal information. All the lines written in this topic will mean nothing to those who have not walked miles away to understand them, and will ring very hard to those who are looking past the hill.

When I was around 5 years old, I was growing with my mother reading me the myths of the "Titanomachy" and the Olympian myths. It didn't make any sense to me but it was fun.

Today the same myth read makes me wonder how it is even possible that something with so profound knowledge is even allowed to exist in this world. The very obvious answer to me now is that because the Gods are powerful.

Indeed, the exposure to the very same information, is only partial. The other important end is the receiving end, i.e., the listener. We live in an era where listening is very low, and therefore, the transmission of information can only be equally low.

The meaning of the JoS is to help you get out of this loop of inferior existing. But this doesn't happen, in contrast to claims, solely by meditation. Practical reconsideration of the self, and opening up to reality is required. I have tried to accelerate this in the hopes that in the future there will be a better level of listening.

Many people also seem to have complained before about the Gods not communicating. I have found this in my own life to be errant, and more oftentimes than not, the listeners are on the wrong side of things, and not the Gods.

For how much wisdom has passed you by without understanding it, and how much more will? But the good news is, we do have all the time we need.
