A recent post was very interesting and I would like to add some points to it.

viewtopic.php?f=3&t=78151

Now, we all know that Satanism is for the strong. However, it looks like further clarification of this topic is needed. As explained on this aspect before, we evolve and we grow. In this case, strength arrives through due process.

It is unacceptable to join Spiritual Satanism and just want to be exactly as weak, ignorant, or how you were before, wanting to grow in no level of existence whatsoever.

One will naturally enter Satanism at this state, but one is propelled and given the tools to move out of this state. That is common as the above is the situation where most people are into in this world due to bad instruction.

To go one step further, Satanism is for the strong, because it generates the strong. It makes you stronger. It is this path that no matter the starting point, you will grow. The above growth is through personal evolution and making the effort to advance.

Certain people are being bitter and sad about the starting point. Well, this is the case of all the sculpted bodies, masterful personalities, and anything that is ever significant in this world. It starts from nothing. Amazon started in a warehouse somewhere in the middle of nowhere, now it is the biggest chain of products sold in the world.

Many of the claimed "strong" in our world are simply weak, or can be externally strong but internally just very weak. Weak and incapable to be of compassion, of understanding, of facing their own wounds, of a myriad of other things, which are simply never done, showing poor levels of strength.

And many of the "weak" of this world can oftentimes display great enduring powers. No matter what, even circumstances can cause a situation where one finds themselves in one position and then the other.

I have seen many claimed "strong" who are not strong to stand for great deeds, and many "weak" people who will climb and climb the mountain while falling and recovering a million times. Strength here as one can see is not linear, nor it is simply something you are always born into or whatever.

In fact, the chances are overwhelming one will not have any of this to begin with, a situation closely related to being a man too in modern society, a society which literally exacts skull crashing pressure to make all men docile, sissified and seen as a threat to all of the universe and planet.

Primarily, power also has a form of justice about itself, in that spiritual and inner power is something one discovers, maintains and advances on their own.

Also, most certainly, the Gods pick oftentimes people who might be distressed or for all normal perceptions in weak positions, but they have the seed of the strong inside their hearts. There is no growth without this seed. Better circumstances can and will arrive, but circumstances on their own without the necessary souls to act, are never enough.

Strength and weakness are not only reliant in external factors. Most of this has to do with our core as a being and our decisions, not only our external circumstances. These two do not always meet. But in our society we are falsely told they are one and the same. This is not the case.

Yet this seed of strength needs cultivation. In other words, the strength and weakness axis is not some linear axis.

Like all forms of strength, muscular, mental or spiritual, one will have to develop this. Certain people start in any of the above from another level than others, and oftentimes this can be natural or from past life work - it doesn't matter. There are ranging levels here.

No matter the level, we have to be tolerant and accepting to ourselves, but firm to overcome our own weaknesses. When we learn to not dwell and not be consumed by the state of weakness and all of this, we overcome it.

When we say Satanism is not for the weak, we mean that Satanism is not for those who wish to eternally remain weak, passive, eternal victims, and make eternal friends with weakness and failure.

The above is very negative and not a good route for life. If one does this, one is harming themselves and eventually this weakness will also harm other people. We have to be mindful that weakness, in general, can be a situation that is dangerous for us and ourselves.
Weakness has many forms, and it can also parade itself as strength more often than not, or come in the form of rage, misplaced arrogance or anger, and many other forms, insisting on mistakes, dull headedness - the list goes. That is managed by self learning.

In the case of becoming stronger, there is a HOW and a PATH to this, and this path is through ascent, healing, understanding. This path is a training based path.

To complain that one is not "the strongest" in this is equally inconsequential as a person who never went to the gym, complaining they are not a bodybuilder. The perfected body requires time, and such is the case too for evolving into a better state as a human being.

Now, one important point. The only way towards power, for men or for women, is from the force that is the masculine force in this world. That force is expansive.

If you sit there like a little bitch whining all day, and doing exactly what you should not be doing, and having no "masculine" traits, the most important being bravery, you will never become stronger, never face yourself, and never improve.

Sitting there like a little bitch, crying in your 20's and 30's and 40's and 50's about matters one should be crying for when they were 5 years old, is the worst investment of time, mental and spiritual energy.

Masculine energy is being fought relentlessly as it is the energy that handles problems and does a myriad of other things, that nobody wants you to do. Every human being has this.

Parasites, kikes, and abusers, do profit immensely from people not having any masculine power, but also not feminine power, and generally no power whatsoever. This, I repeat, involves men and women equally.

Over the years as Clergy, I have seen many claimed "strong" people, who have been very powerful for all respects outwardly, really showing no power to do anything important in life such as do something important for the JoS. They just idly sit there doing nothing.

I have lost count on how many "weak" people have helped me raise the JoS, and how many of the "higher status" never stood up to show evidence of any claimed, believed by themselves or whatever, form of higher status.
Eventually, the Wheel of Fortune arrives and these people find themselves where they belong, while the so called "weak" of the current moment will become "strong".

Then, one will have to prove if in reality one is strong. If not, they fall again on the weak status. We fight to preserve. Life also commonly implies that this happens by external events - the person who is decided to be strong, will remain as such.

As one can understand from life, "Weakness" and "Strength" are also relative and can co-exist inside a person at both times. One might be very old and therefore weak in body, but many other levels of strength one has might be at the maximum, ranging from social influence to wealth, knowledge or wisdom.

Through a series of overcoming our own limitations, we become stronger. In weight training this is very simple to understand, but similar is the case in life as well. Life is about overcoming limitations. As we overcome these, we become stronger.

We have to be fierce with our own limitations, because oftentimes, when you are too soft you might not surpass your limits, but when you are reckless and you push your limits too far, that is also imbalanced.

Either of these states can cause a problem in one's development, so one has to stay in the middle. This is way more difficult in practice than in the theory of it. One learns with time.

We work towards the better and perfect version of ourselves, and we build this, refining our inner world, with knowledge and understanding.

We grow step by step, and there will the state of imperfection or not being perfect is the given beginning for us all. Depending on one's personality, we have to also consider how and at what pace one can evolve.

This comes after we learn about ourselves and apply the Apollonian adage of Knowing Thyself. Knowing will come through error, trials, facing weakness, and many similar events. After these are encountered and dealt with, we rise to a higher and more realized state, which acts as a checkpoint in our growth.

© Joy of Satan Ministries
www.joyofsatan.org