

Mark Pinkham

Ghost in the Machine wrote:

Is Path of The Dragon by Mark Amaru Pinkham a good read? I'm also interested in Return of The Serpents of Wisdom. Would they be good books to hang onto?

Pinkham's work is good for a lot of the information, but Pinkham is a Theosophist and he is attempting to interpret the ancient Pagan traditions through a Judeo-Christian ideological framework to promote Theosophy. This fails and causes a major contradiction in his work. There is no "fall" of Sanat Kumara-Shiva in the east where Sanat Kumara-Shiva is the Maha Deva the highest God. This is something he has injected in from Christianity. His claim that Sananda is Jesus is from Theosophy and Pinkham's claim that Sananda is Jesus and Sanat is his fallen brother Satan does not exist anywhere in the original religions in the East. This attempting to promote the framework of the Jewish Kabbalah which most of Theosophy is built on the concept with this being the Good Inclination and the Evil Inclination relating to the book of Isaiah in the Judeo-Christian bible. Which is then expanded out into the Sananda-Jesus, Sanat-Satan framework of Pinkham, who does not hide that this is what it's based on in his work. He is open about such. In the final understanding, Pinkham is attempting to recreate Judeo-Christianity with a new framework, which is the goal of Theosophy. He is promoting a new age Christian doctrine. I don't believe Pinkham is some nefarious character either. He just does not know any better. This is how the program of Christianity works on the mind.

Sanat Kumara-Shiva was never a fallen or evil being. When the enemy programs took over starting with Zoroastrianism they simply declared the Devas, the Gods, to be evil now and declared Shiva the Maha Deva, the highest God (Deva), to be Ahriman the evil being, and all the followers of such to be evil. The Yezidhis are open about they worship Ahriman, and thus Shiva. This is not hidden and it's documented in the book Shiva: The Wild God of Power and Ecstasy, by Wolf-Dieter Storl Ph.D., who is a cultural anthropologist. The Yezidhis just cloaked their Hindu culture in an Islamic cloak to survive. This is something the Judeo-Islamics stated about Melek Taus being a fallen angel and if the Yezidhis challenged this and stated that, no, Melek Taus is God and not fallen, and Allah is false they would have been wiped out. The Yezidhi Sufis all traveled east to Sri Lanka to the city of Sanat Kumara to practice and be taught spiritual knowledge from Hinduism without having to worry about the Muslims. They didn't travel to Mecca. There is no fallen peacock angel. That is why further east, where the Judeo-Islamics never conquered, there is no fallen Sanat Kumara-Shiva. Theosophy is the Christian psychic virus mutating into the new age. Pinkham needs to deprogram from Jewish Christianity and wake up.

January 23, 2020

Joy of Satan Forums Contributions