

Stalin's Real Surname Means Son of a Jew

Stalin's place of birth, Gori, was the home of the largest Georgian Jewish population at that time, with Jewish groups such as the Lezgishvili being one of the largest groups of Jews in Georgia.

Something to highlight is Stalin's original surname (at birth), which was Djugashvili/Dzhugashvili (in Georgian - ჯუღაშვილი).

Based on what Eastern Europeans had told Maurice Pinay, who had escaped the red terror, he wrote:

"In the Georgian language "shvili" means son of, or son, as in Johnson. "Djuda" means Jew. Therefore Djugashvili means Jewison..." [1]
Juda or luda is the word for Jew in Georgia.

Note the mention of Iranian origin:

Stalin's surname is mentioned by Buachidze to have possible Persian origins over Georgian surnames: "Genetic studies carried out on Georgian Jews as part of a wider survey showed close genetic links with other Jews, and in particular with Iraqi and Persian Jews. This seemed to prove the historical accounts of Jewish migration from Persia into Georgia." [2]

There are Jews in the Caucasus who claim Persian origin. One of the largest Jewish communities in central Asia is the Bukharian Jews who speak a Persian-based language and stated they came from Persia. Among their surnames, there are very similar ones in meaning to Stalin's, such as Yuda-kov.

"Stalin's childhood origins were supposedly Georgian, but the truth is his mother was Ossete, from the Khazarian region."

Khazaria was the original home of the Jews in Eastern Europe. Most of the Ashkenazi Jews are actually Kharazian. Unlike bogus claims put forth by certain Jews, Morden's genetic tests show the Jews of the Kharazian region are racial Jews and not random converts.

Djuga Jugashvili ~ Judashvili ~ Juda-son, Dzhugashvili ~ Juda-son.

The "dzh" is simply used for the J sound in Russian. Dzh is simply the J sound in the Slavic languages.

This explains why Stalin could perfectly speak Yiddish his whole life. Yiddish is the common language Jews speak in most places next to Hebrew.

"Lots of sources describe Beria as a Jew, and state, he was talking Yiddish with Stalin's children. " [3]

This makes sense because Stalin spoke Yiddish and was married to Jewesses who spoke the same language. Beria would talk with Stalin's children in Yiddish as well.

Stalin frequently attended the Yiddish theater as well.

"In 1921 the GOSET troupe moved into a theater less than a mile from the Kremlin. For 28 years, through purge, terror, and paranoia, they presented world-class theater in Yiddish." [4]

This is very revealing, as the top people in Moscow were Jews who could speak Yiddish. Stalin, his wife and children, and even Beria were sitting around the dinner table speaking Yiddish with each other.

Stalin's oldest son Yakov [a common Jewish first name] married another Jewess, Yulia Meltzer, a well-known Jewish dancer from Odessa who was formerly married to an NKVD officer.

"[Regarding Stalin] ...most of the women around him and many of his closest collaborators, from Yagoda to Mekhlis, were Jewish. Stalin was aware that his regime had to stand against anti-Semitism and we find in his notes a reminder to give a speech about it: he called it 'cannibalism' made it a criminal offense, and regularly criticized anti-Semites. Stalin founded a Jewish homeland, Birobizhan, on the Chinese border, and boasted, The Tsar gave the Jews no land, but we will." [5]

David Weissman, in an article in the B'NAI B'RITH MESSENGER (Mar. 3, 1950), stated that Stalin is a Jew. Stalin spoke Yiddish and had three Jewish wives.

The Jewish writer Louis Levine, in SOVIET RUSSIA TODAY (Nov. 1946) wrote: "Stalin & the father of his Jewish son-in-law drank Lachaim together in the Kremlin."

A columnist in the Los Angeles B'nai B'rith Messenger, March 3, 1950, col. 2, p. 5 wrote: "A former Soviet general claims that Joseph Stalin is of Jewish ancestry." Many White Russians who fled the Bolsheviks state Stalin was a Jew. One captain from the Czar's army stated that he knew Stalin in their boyhood and that Stalin's father (Djugashvili) was "a Jewish cobbler".
